MATOŠ I UJEVIĆ

 Преведите на ёнглески.

Antun Gustav Matoš was born in 1873 in Tovarnik, a small town near Šid in Srijem. At 19 he fled to Serbia so as not to serve in the Austro-Hungarian army. He spent the next three years in Belgrade playing the cello, training pupils and students, and working as a journalist and writer. He left Belgrade, however, having offended other writers with his merciless criticism, and moved to Paris where he lived for five years. Wherever he was, he wrote essays, poems and tales, and published them in various periodicals in both Croatia and Bosnia. He missed Zagreb, but since the Austro-Hungarian government still considered him a fugitive, he was not able to return right away. Thus after leaving Paris he spent an additional four years in Belgrade. He finally returned to Zagreb in 1908, where he lived until his death in 1914. A.G. Matoš won fame for his essays and poems, and especially his sonnets. Soon after his return to Zagreb he became the leading cultural figure. He is considered the first modern Croatian poet. In the years preceding his death a group of Zagreb poets and writers gathered around him, among whom was Tin Ujević.

Augustin Ujević (1891-1955), known by his nickname Tin, was a native of Dalmatinska Zagora. He made the acquaintance of Matoš while he was a student in Zagreb. At first they were close friends, but then they came into fierce conflict and parted as rivals. Ujević never completely got over his rivalry with Matoš even though he outlived him by more than 40 years. Ujević was also known for changing residence frequently. He went to Paris in 1913 and stayed there until the end of World War I, working as a translator and a writer. While there, he lived a bohemian life and barely managed to make ends meet: he returned to Zagreb in 1919. After that he moved to Belgrade which he used as a base for his travels until 1930, when he moved to Sarajevo. He returned to Zagreb only on the eve of World War II. During the NDH period he took on work as a translator of newspaper articles and, correspondingly, was paid by the fascist government. After the war, the communists punished him for collaboration with the occupying forces, and prohibited him from publishing any of his own poems or other writings for a period of five years. During this time, therefore, he devoted himself to translation, primarily from the French and English. Even today his translations of Whitman, Poe, Conrad, Proust and Sartre are read. Even after he had fallen ill with throat cancer, he continued to translate Proust from his hospital bed up to his last days. During his lifetime he published five volumes of poetry. Pupils and students in Croatia still learn his poems by heart.
